

Hello everyone

How are you all getting on?

There seems to be some hope that we may be able to move about more soon. Perhaps even go shopping

So, it's time to go on you tube and learn how to mend your shopping bag.

Yes, there are you tube videos that deal with that Although my favourite was the one called make an origami shopping bag.

I had visions of carrying my shopping home from Morrisons in the rain and having to stop in the bus shelter to pick up my goods from the soggy remains of the bag an transfer them to my emergency bag brough along just in case.

But it turns out that the video had a bit of a surprise in it Origami in this sense meant manipulating some pretty heavy duty fabric.

But maybe that fits with today's worship since is the weekend of our virtual picnic

I'm not sure what you have planned or have done, but I've discovered somethings about myself. For example, though it is decades since I left school, sporting prowess is still the level it was when I last kicked a football in the 1970's.

But I also discovered that having a virtual picnic affords opportunities that a normal picnic cannot give.

For example, who knew how many sandwiches I'd have to eat before we actually got a usable version of this talk!

Most enjoyable

I often wonder how the disciples feel in our reading this morning as Jesus gathers them and tells them they are to go out and spread the good news.

I think there may have been a few heads bowed toes in the sand, worrying about who would look after their latest fashionable footwear purchase and their third tunic.

But it maybe makes us think about how we will feel when we step outside our front doors again.

Maybe the advice Paul gives to the churches in Roma and Galatia can help

Serve one another, he says

With unflagging zeal, aglow with the Spirit, serve the Lord.

Let us worship God
